

Praising the project, Kentish Town mosaic artist Kirstie Mogilner said: "The children could really use their imaginations as well as including animals from the farm." Picture by Nigel Sutton ed to the UK shortly after the Second World War when she fell in love with an RAF pilot. The cou-

West Hampstead residents hit by the flood have joined forces to ask Thames Water to carry out an

Council 'broke promise' on eruv poles

HEATH bosses have hit out at Barnet Council for going back on a promise to install environmentally friendly eruv poles in a conservation area.

Superintendent Simon Lee, who is responsible for Hampstead Heath, has written to Barnet Council asking it to justify why poles in Wildwood

Road for the controversial Jewish boundary will be made from metal instead of wood.

The boundary, which includes roads in Hampstead Garden Suburb, Golders Green and Child's Hill, will allow observant Jews to carry out duties normally forbidden on the Sabbath.

The first poles – made from metal and coloured "goose-wing grey" – were put in Prospect Place, East Finchley, last week, with poles in Wildwood Road expected to go up in the coming weeks.

According to a spokesman from Heath managers, the Corporation of London, the council promised two years ago that poles in Wildwood Road, which borders the Heath, would be wooden.

But last week, the Corporation learned that the poles would be metal.

A council spokesman said the matter was being investigated and a reply was expected soon.

JW
RS
PS
EB
D.F
EKU

HAM and HEATH 30/8/2002